RENSSALAER ZENAS BUSH

Our community received a shock on Tuesday evening, June 27th, when it was learned that Rensselaer Zenas Bush had succumbed following an operation at Kingston general hospital. He was born in Richmond township in the year 1875, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Bush, who survive at the old homestead. Educated in the public school there early took an interest in all that pertained to progressive citizenship, and the year 1897 there was solemnized his marriage with Miss Minnie Foote, of the same Township, now left to mourn the loss of a faithful husband and loving father. The union was favored with the following children: Miss Gladys, Ray and Ross, twins, the two now residing at Forest Mills; Fred and Vera also at home. For five years "Rant," as he was familiarly known, served with vigor as councillor of Richmond township, finally succeeding to the chair of Reeve. These duties enabled him to take a keen part in the affairs of the community and to represent its interests in the combined County Council of Lennox and Addington, and participating in deputations and consequent duties involving the welfare of rural life. Empey Hill Methodist church ever found in him a loyal, conscientious devotion to church obligations.

On account of ill health he left his farm two years ago, and his connection with professional life and established a new home in South Napanee. Here he carried on with his bright, hopeful spirit, serving as road boss in connection with county roads, and later in the work of the corporation of Napanee. A few days before his untimely end the malady of stomach trouble suddenly manifested a serious turn, and despite expert medical skill, the Grim Reaper claimed him. An operation was found necessary, but Providence deemed it best to relieve him of life's suffering and life's responsibilities.

The funeral was held Friday afternoon, June 23rd, at 2 o'clock, to Riverside cemetery, and a large concourse of friends and former neighbors testified to the regret and sorrow keenly felt. Rev. Anderson, of Selby, and Rev. Tait, of Morven, conducted the service at the house. Tributes were paid by profound floral offerings and kindly words to the deceased's sterling worth and adherence to the principles that ennoble family life. The pall bearers were M. P. Graham, F. S. Boyes, J. Friskin, B. Black, A. T. Turnbull and H. Armitage. Much sympathy is extended to the bereaved widow and young family in their sore trial, but theirs is a fond memory of earnest piety and the consolation that one waits to join them in a happy circle beyond. Associates throughout the district will miss his merry and jovial disposition.

BIG PICNIC AT STELLA

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE LENNOX AND ADDINGTON U. F. O.

The United Farmers of Lennox and Addington held a monster picnic at Stella on Tuesday afternoon of last week in co-operation with the U.F.W.O., and the occasion brought throngs of farmers and their wives from different points throughout the counties, the weather was ideal and the addresses given by E. J. Sexsmith, M.P., and leaders from Frontenac created the utmost enthusiasm.

During the afternoon a programme of sports was run off including baseball matches by girls' teams, and boys' teams, and running races. In the evening there was dancing in the town hall.

Sheridan Patterson presided, and the address of welcome was given by S. Miller, Reeve of Amherst Island.

E. J. Sexsmith, M.P., for Lennox and Addington, was in splendid form and after expressing his great pleasure to be present, said he was glad to have the organizations of the clubs in all matters of interest to them. "Amherst Island," he said, "was first settled by Anglo-Saxon, U. E. Loyalist stock possessing strong democratic principles such as are enunciated by the United Farmers of to-day. While in parliament during the recent session it was my privilege to vote solidly against such measures as combining to hold office as directors of the big industries. It was necessary solidly all public questions upon their merits for I conceive it to be the duty of the farmers to assist in building up and not pulling down. I was told in an interesting way of the conditions found in parliament and of the factors that make up the four groups. "The farmers must be big enough and broad enough to support what will benefit all industries, no less than agriculture." Referring to national problems he said that "none could ignore the enormous war debt, which had to be paid. Yet in no way did it appear that many industries have asked to be released from war tax. I am glad to say that not one farmer asked for release." (Applause).

Mr. Sexsmith made the interesting announcement that the Willoughby Bill, so long needed for the benefit both of the farmers on the island and the mainland would be built this summer. "This is due to my efforts at Ottawa," said the speaker amidst applause.

In concluding his excellent address, Mr. Sexsmith counselled his hearers to set a high value upon their organization as it gave additional interest in the farming industry, and declared, "I am a servant of the electors of all parties of Lennox and Addington, and of Canada as a whole."

Mrs. Graham, secretary of the Frontenac U.F.W.O., gave an excellent address in which she conveyed a message from the farm women of Frontenac to the women of Lennox and Addington, and emphasized the importance of organization, and regretted to observe that the women were not taking the active interest they should in public affairs. She congratulated her hearers upon electing their representative to the Commons, and also counselled them to keep a live interest in their clubs which were directly identified with the welfare of the farm industry.

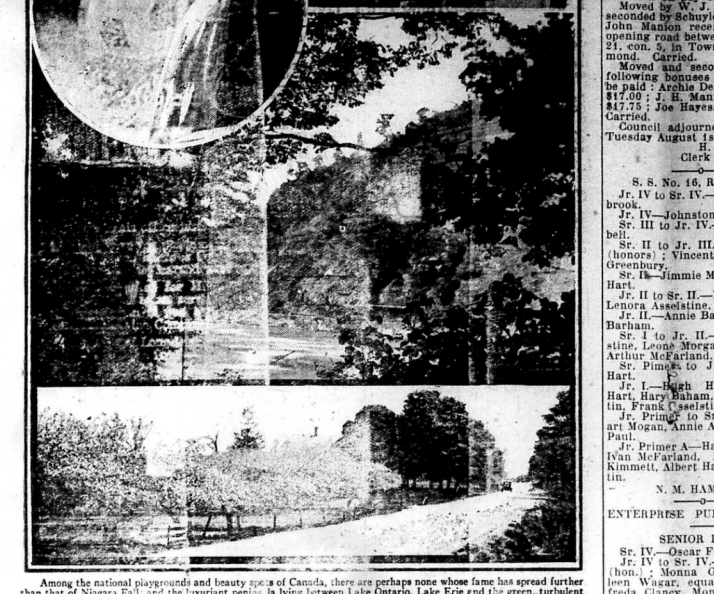
Within the Roar of Niagara



Among the national playgrounds and beauty spots of Canada, there are perhaps none whose fame has spread further than that of Niagara Fall; and the luxuriant peninsula lying between Lake Erie and the green, turbulent Niagara River, aptly called "The Garden of Canada". With its vineyards and orchards, it is a veritable fairyland in blossom time, when hundreds of tourists come from all parts of the province to see the beauty of the orchards. History, too, has cast its spell over the peninsula, and at various points along the frontier are to be seen old forts and battlefields, relics of the War of 1812-14.

Niagara Falls has continuous charm for visitors. The tremendous electrical development plants, with their great power tentacles stretching to numerous points in Ontario and to a portion of the United States, are an ever increasing source of interest. The beautiful parkways, extending for thirty miles along the Niagara River from Fort Erie through Bridgeburg, Chippewa, Niagara Falls and Queenston to Niagara-on-the-Lake, provide one of the finest scenic motor roads in the Dominion. This area of beauty includes a park at Fort Erie, Queen Victoria Park at Niagara Falls, Lundy's Lane Cemetery, which marks one of the famous battles of 1812, Niagara Glen, the choicest beauty spot on the peninsula, where unusual geological formations and rare flora are to be found, Queenston Heights and the sites around Forts George and Mississauga at Niagara-on-the-Lake.

This playground is reached by the first class service of the Canadian National Railways through its Niagara-St. Catharines Line of steamboats from Toronto to Port Dalhousie, and then by radial car throughout the peninsula. Port Dalhousie has the finest bathing beach on Lake Ontario, an excellent recreation park and dance pavilion, and is a popular picnic resort for the people of Toronto and other Ontario points.

Artificial Lightning.

A wonderful electrical record was set up recently in the laboratory of the General Electric Company, at Pittsburg, in the United States.

Dr. Charles Steinmetz, the famous consulting engineer, succeeded in producing a current of no less than a million volts. This is fifty times the voltage of a flash of lightning.

The wire that conveyed the current was four inches in diameter, and the current was so strong that it jumped a gap of nine feet in the conducting material and formed an arc of glittering fire like a flash of lightning.

The million volts were obtained by a series of "step-up" transformers on the principle that when coils of wire are wound round a single coil, the current of the double coil it twice the voltage of the current in the single coil. In this way, Dr. Steinmetz gradually increased a two-thousand-volt current to one of a million volts.

Ocean Depths.

The United States Navy Department has been working on a device for measuring ocean depths by means of reflected sound waves, but as yet has not perfected it to a point where it wishes to give out information regarding it. A recent German device of similar nature has been developed, by means of which depth measurements, accurate to within one foot, can be made even when the ship is moving at full speed.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Prohibition.

On the subject of prohibition, Premier King promised on March 28 that while the suggestion for a Dominion-wide act would receive careful consideration by the Cabinet, no such measure would be introduced at the present session of the House of Commons. For his part, the Premier added, he did not favor prohibition in anything, although he favored temperance in everything.

ANIMALS AS CRIMINALS.

Four-footed Beasts Have Been Trained to Steal.

The case reported recently of a dog which had been trained to snatch women's handbags, which he bore off to his master, who was concealed some distance away, is by no means unique.

One man taught his dog to steal meat from the window of butchers' shops. The animal was so well trained that invariably it would deliver the meat to its master quite intact. Joint after joint disappeared in this way, until one butcher, ignorant of the true nature of the thefts, poisoned some meat and left it in a conspicuous position. The dog took the joint, and it was his master becoming violently ill that led to exposure.

Cats, also, have been educated as crooks, and one ingenious scoundrel did a considerable business in cats which he trained to overturn lighted lamps. The animals were bought by unscrupulous holders of heavy fire insurance policies who wished to "realize" on their businesses. The procedure was to leave the cat in a room containing a lighted lamp surrounded by combustible material. The cat did the rest.

A four-footed animal was a participant in a series of remarkable thefts from a jeweler's shop. Jewelery disappeared night after night, and there were not the slightest traces of burglars having entered the place.

One morning a monkey was found crouching in a corner of the shop. The animal's owner had taught it to pick up any bright objects it saw. The thief smuggled the monkey into the shop by way of a small ventilator and waited outside until the intelligent animal came back with whatever piece of jewellery had attracted its attention.

But the monkey, which showed signs of ill-treatment, was more intelligent than its master thought. On the night of its capture it did not attempt to return to its owner. It is now being "reformed" in the home of a kindly policeman.

Teakin Wood.

Certain changes in the character of wood which normally takes place only after many years of drying are, by a new chemical process produced within twenty-four hours. Thereafter, when the moisture that may still be left has evaporated, the wood becomes harder and more durable than by the aging process. All wood treated by this process is called teakin wood. Teakin birch is a beautiful golden brown color, and when polished with potash it takes on a mahogany red hue. As soon as Canadian or Russian birch is obtainable, the progess will be applied to boards and planks of this kind of wood. Teakin ash is a substitute for teak. Teakin elm has none of the disadvantages of natural elm. Teakin fir is of a uniform color all through and is used for office fittings and furniture and for veneering.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

This has been a busy week for the members of the Cabinet who remained in Ottawa to clean up a lot of work which had to be held over during the strenuous days of closing up the session. Cabinet council has been meeting daily to clear away some of the mass of things that must have attention before the Ministers are able to get away on any vacation trips and consideration of many important matters has kept noses pretty well to the grindstone.

Canada's delegates to the League of Nations assembly at Geneva on September 4th have been named this week. The delegates will be headed by the veteran statesman, Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, who will be the chief spokesman for the Dominion. With him from Canada he will have Hon. Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and on their arrival at London the two Ministers will be joined by the third Canadian delegate in the person of Hon. P. C. Larkin, the Canadian High Commissioner. There are many matters of importance to Canada to come before the League Assembly and Canadian people will be able to feel that they are being well looked after with these three delegates sitting on the various committees.

* * * * *

It is announced also that while they are in England and France the Canadian Ministers will take up departmental matters which are requiring attention. In the case of Hon. Mr. Fielding this is taken to indicate that among other things the veteran Minister of Finance will be likely to take up the question of a comprehensive trade treaty with France, in an endeavor to secure a treaty approximating that which was in force up to a few days ago.

The present situation as regards France is that a treaty was signed a couple of years ago which seemed to contemplate further negotiations. Some time ago the French authorities attempted to open those negotiations but the government of the day in this country considered the time inexpedient, and took no action. This spring, however, the French Consul-General at Montreal approached the King government on the subject and was informed that the Canadian authorities would be willing to enter into negotiations at a convenient time. No further action has since been taken, but it is expected that while in Paris Mr. Fielding will take steps to resume negotiations on the spot, and seek to bring about the passage of a comprehensive treaty between the two countries.

During the last two week or so the government has been actively taking steps to bring about a betterment in the civil service conditions. In some of the departments, when the new government came into office, it was found that despite a clear claim of efficiency due to re-organization and re-classification, there was an almost unbelievable state of affairs, with employees refusing to acknowledge the authority of the deputy ministers and others over them, and claiming that as the matter of their promotions and dismissals rested with the Civil Service Commission they were amenable only to that body. This state of affairs resulted in almost a deadlock in at least one department, and the government finally put such a state of affairs existing took steps to clean house.

The organizations representing the civil servants were called in to conference, followed by the deputy ministers. Then, when the government had got the views of the important sections of the public service they brought the Civil Service Commission up before them to see if the regulations governing the service could not be whipped into shape to increase efficiency, and at the same time remove many of the causes for complaint which at the present are causing a great deal of unrest amongst the government employees.

The outcome of the conference, it is expected, will be that changes will be made within a few days in the regulations which will remove many of the hampering clauses at present existing; give the deputy ministers and ministers closer control of the work of their staffs, their promotion and so forth, and at the same time, bring about a greater measure of efficiency without employing so-called experts from outside of Canada, which course was followed by the last government. Civil Servants in Ottawa welcome the changes which are proposed, and expectations are that a great improvement in their conditions will result.

* * * * *

One of the developements of the past few days has been a renewal of the gossip and rumors around cabinet re-arrangement and changes. So far as any immediate changes are concerned, there has been little or no definite nature on which to hang such gosip, but at the same time it is not unlikely that before long there may be a little switching around. Hon. A. B. Hudson, member for South Winnipeg, is looked upon as likely to enter the cabinet within a comparatively short time and his entrance will considerably strengthen the forces about Hon. Mr. Meighen in the House. At the present time Manitoba is without direct representation in the cabinet. When the Liberal-Conservative-Progressive fusion came up shortly after election Mr. Hudson was prominently mentioned as one of the men who would be taken in. His entry would be acceptable to the farmers, and also to the Liberals, and during the past session of parliament he has shown himself a capable member.

Sitting with the Liberals, he has at the same time been closely in touch with the Progressives in the House and has been looked to by them for guidance on many occasions. With Mr. Hudson in the King cabinet the Crerar party would feel that they had a friend at court almost as much as though Mr. Crerar himself were there, and Mr. Hudson appears not unwilling to take over one of the posts, if the Prime Minister should desire it.

It would appear unlikely, however, that anything in the nature of general cabinet re-arrangement would take place before later in the summer, by which time the political atmosphere in the provinces will have cleared considerably, and the Prime Minister will be able to lay his plans better.

In addition to the re-organization of the Civil Service previously mentioned, the government has taken steps to bring about increased efficiency in the naval and marine department by switching some of the branches of the Naval Department which are technical in their work, to the Marine Department, and at the same time making provision for the re-classification of the officials of the branches so transferred and for reducing the staffs wherever it is found feasible to do so. The grouping of the three defence departments of Army, Navy and Air Board under the administration of Hon. Geo. P. Graham is being carried out as rapidly as possible, and a considerable saving to the country is expected to result in this reform.

Curing Horses' Colds.

Why are the common chestnuts which the small boy calls "conkers" known as "horse-chestnuts"?

Some people believe that they can see, where the leaf-stem breaks from the twig, a small horseshoe, marked even to the nails.

On the contrary, an old writer said they are so called because "people in the East countries do with the fruit thereof cure their horses of the cough, shortness of breath, and such like disease."

It is always a temptation to seek for an ingenious explanation when there is a simple one at hand, but the fact is that the horse-chestnut has no connection whatever with the horse.

The word "horse," as used not only in horse-chestnut, but also in horse-laugh, horse-play, horse-radish, and horse-mint, is the same word as "gorse," the common name of the rough, prickly shrub of our commons.

The horse-chestnut deserves its prefix doubly, for when enclosed in its burr it is a prickly thing to handle, and its kernel is acrid and unpleasant to the taste. Similarly, the horse-radish is a pungent tuber and the horse-mint a pungent mint. Horse-play is rough, uncouth play, and a horse-laugh is a vulgar, boisterous guffaw

Air That Makes You Sing.

Many people think that air sickness attacks all flying men, but this is not correct. There is far less danger of air sickness than of seasickness, and even those who, on land, are unable to look down from heights without feeling giddy, can fly with perfect comfort.

Up to about ten thousand feet no change is noticed except a slight deepening of the breathing and an exhilaration that shows itself in a desire to sing! From this rule the effects of high flying are not noticed until fifteen thousand feet is reached.

These effects are due to the fact that there is less oxygen in the air at great heights. The variation in air pressure makes little or no difference, because the air inside the human body expands, but only those suffering from catarrh feel any inconvenience.

By the aid of oxygen an American pilot reached a height of forty thousand feet without suffering from any ill effects.

For high flying oxygen in liquid form is carried, and in the future pilots will probably carry oxygen to prevent fatigue on long flights.

Our Merchant Marine.

From information given to the House of Commons on March 29 it was gathered that the Canadian Government lost $2,210,724 in operating its merchant marine in 1921. In addition, $3,357,833 interest was owed the Government, and depreciation was figured at $4,158,775.

A Sacred Well.

At Chichen-itza, in Yucatan, where there is a sacred sinking well, all sorts of beautiful sacrifices have been found imbedded in the mud. Jade neckiaces, gold plates and small jars heavily studded with jade, sometimes containing human hearts, have been found in this well, says the Detroit News. The Maya Indians make these sacrifices when they wanted rain or a blessing for their crops. Beautiful gold knives that were undoubtedly used to carve up the victims of sacrifice, usually young women, have also been found. The Maya Indians of northern Yucatan probably use the same language as the builders of the cities among which they live, says Prof. A. M. Tozzer, of Harvard University.

Famous Trail Now Opened

One of the most famous of Mounted Police trails has been charted for adventurous tourists. It is the Fort Yukon-Fort McPherson route, over the Rockies, hallowed by the fortitude and heroism of numerous R.N.W.M.P. patrols and especially by the sacrifice of Fitzgerald and his men in a historic winter exploit.

Last summer the Dominion Government sent a party which traversed the route by canoe and has prepared a report, which is of first aid to Canadians who really want to do some exploring.

This is the time of year when mamma is looking for a nice summer resort where the daughters can find the nicest dancing partners and when dad is looking for a nice summer resort where he won't have to shave for a fortnight. The encroachment of the evening gown type of place on the he-man wilderness is so rapid that dad is in a quandary. Muskoka is terribly effete and even Timagami and Nipigon are becoming civilized.

But the reign of tin cans and civilization has not extended far beyond the Peace River, and an empire raw enough for a man's holiday can still be found in the Mackenzie and Yukon country. That is the word brought back by F. H. Kitto, exploratory engineer for the Department of the Interior. His party went by rail, steamer and canoe from Edmonton to Fort McPherson on the Mackenzie river, where the real trip commenced.

The historic trail across the Rockies, northward toward Dawson City, was first blazed by the Klondykers of '98. They found it too much for their slender equipment, and had to abandon supplies and risk their lives in the snow-clad gorges and rapids. Soon the gold seekers found that the route from the Pacific Ocean was preferable, but the Mounted Police continued to use it as a means of reaching the Arctic Ocean with the semi-annual mail.

The Mounted Police had a rule that frontier mail must be carried always forward, never backward. Forward in this case meant into the mountains through a blizzard of many days. Inspector Fitzgerald and his party left Fort McPherson for Dawson late in 1910. The January storms obliterated the trail. Canoes—the usual means of transport in good weather up there—were, of course, useless at that season. Up the Rat river, past Destruction City, and into McDougall's Pass they went on snowshoes. For six days they lived on dog-flesh, and then ate the buckskin straps of the sleds.

Three bodies were found close together. Fitzgerald staggered on ahead and died of starvation. His will, made at the last with a charcoal stick, read as follows: "All money in despatch bag, bank, clothes, etc., I leave to my dearly beloved mother, Mrs. John Fitzgerald, Halifax. God bless all. F. J. Fitzgerald, R.N.W.M.P."

And the search party reported: "The regular Herschell Island-Fort McPherson mail for Dawson, carried by the Fitzgerald patrol, was found secure and intact under Inspector Fitzgerald's body, and has been duly delivered."

Holidaying in the wake of such men, Canadians may well feel a pride in their country and in its makers.

Fitzgerald had short-cut overland which made his route 450 miles. But in summer the canoeist will find a 600-mile waterway of great scenic and sporting interest. Although the route connects the Mackenzie and Yukon waterways, almost the entire distance is down stream. Sturdy 18-foot cruiser canoes are the best means of travel. The Kitto party found condensed provisions necessary all the way and guides part of the way, although experienced paddlers could run some of the rapids alone.

Such facts promise a real holiday of the "roughing-it" variety. If you want to leave civilization at Edmonton, traverse thousands of miles of river and ocean, see the last north-west, climb the Rockies and re-enter civilization at Vancouver—this is the trip.

Fort McPherson, the starting place, is quite a metropolis with three trading company stores, a police barracks, mission farm and nondescript populace. Besides, there is the midnight sun for three months in the summer, which will enable paddlers to work themselves into good condition without going out in the dark. The idea is to get away from the Mackenzie, which would carry canoes to the Arctic, and Herschell, and to reach some stream which would take the voyageurs to the Pacific ocean, also the summer outing might become a two-year hibernation with the Eskimos.

The short and easy route to the Pacific is up the Peel river, a westward branch of the Mackenzie. There is only bothersome current in the first half of the canoe journey is the ascent of the Rat river, a branch of the Peel. Of course, McDougall's pass means a stiff portage, but first there are the wonderful duck hunting and tie less wonderful portage on the Rat. The rapids of the Rat are at what is called Destruction City, so named by the Klondike stampeders who had to abandon most of their supplies there. Above Destruction City there is a constant succession of rapids and small falls, and canoeists ascend 1,200 feet in the next forty miles. Here is some of the most strenuous work of the kind on the continent. The reward is health and wonderful scenery, canyons, waterfalls, forests, crags, lake and trout.

As a means of combating the wave of crime all Paris is being thumb-printed.

NEW POLITICAL BOSS

PARISH PRIEST IS NOW INFLUENTIAL IN ITALY.

Don Sturzo, Who Began Life as a Sicilian, Has Acquired as Much Influence as Boss Croker Wielded Even When at the Height of His Powers In New York City.

Something new in political bosses has been produce dby Italy — the priest as a political boss. Everybody knows that the clergy, and especially the high dignitaries of the church, are influential in politics everywhere, except perhaps in Russia, but so far as we are aware, history fails to provide a precedent for a parish priest becoming the political boss of a nation. That is what Don Sturzo is in Italy. He is the founder, organizer and master of the Popular Catholic Party, which is the strongest individual party in Italy. If Mr. J. J. Morrison were in absolute control of the Farmers' Party he would be in some such position in Ontario as Don Sturzo is in Italy; but nobody knows better than Mr. Morrison that he is not. Nobody disputes with Don Sturzo for the control of the political organization which he has created. Don Sturzo can and does, make and unmake premiers. No Italian premier can hold office against his will. He overthrew Giolitti, for a generation the master of Italian politics. He also compelled the retirement of the Archbishop of Genoa, who was opposed to him, and Pope Benedict did no more than favor the archbishop with a formal note of regret at his exit. In Italy it is even said that he had much to do with the election of the present Pope, but this is probably a fable.

Don Sturzo is a Sicilian, and twenty years ago was a young priest, living the harsh, rough life of one little removed from the peasant in unprosperous village. He was a wide reader and an intense thinker. Had he not been a priest one would have called him a demagogue or a bolshevist. He knew the hard lives of his parishioners and saw that they suffered from absentee landlords, predatory politicians and the Government at Rome, which was generally inefficient or corrupt. His great idea was that the Roman Catholic Church, instead of remaining aloof from politics, had a great opportunity of influencing politics. That is at the bottom of his campaign to-day. He wants the church to become the chief political power in Italy, and it would appear that he has already made her so.

It may be that this innate, unproclaimed intention won for him the indulgence of his spiritual superiors without which his career would have been nipped in the bud. To-day it is doubtful if the Pope himself could overthrow him. It was not by emphasizing the opportunity for glorifying the church that Sturzo, naturally the best informed man in the village, enlisted the peasants. He showed them how they could better their material conditions, and thus launched his little revolt against the local political bosses and the idle rich. He taught a kind of Bolshevism, for he said that it was unfair that the peasants should seize and work the land of absentees, but when his followers proposed by force of numbers to seize the already cultivated possessions of small holders, he restrained them. Thus, he did not offend any industrious man, even though he had acquired wealth, although from him he first his chief supporters were those who had nothing.

There have been thousands of leaders who have started out like Don Sturzo and have become powerful politically, but, as a rule, his predecessors, once they became influential, were ready to make terms with existing political parties, and to be absorbed by them. From first to last Don Sturzo has refused to amalgamate. His party has remained free to attack any existing party. Even when it was a small minority in Sicily it had the balance of power. It could not govern, but it could say who would govern, which is a much pleasanter way to conduct affairs, since one has the authority and avoids the responsibility for failure. Gradually Sturzo's fame and influence spread. Because the principle that he urged for the Sicilian hamlet were found to be applicable to most of Italy.

The main principle, or rather the one most plainly avowed and most enthusiastically acclaimed, is that of decentralization. He would deprive the national Government of much of its power and would distribute it among the municipalities. He advocated autonomy for the smallest hamlets, and since the smallest hamlets are just as keen for local autonomy as the largest cities, he has found this principle a successful one. He found his chief lieutenants among village priests, like himself, men anxious to do something for their parishioners, and also zealous to advance the political power of the church, which would naturally increase their own importance. To-day Sturzo's party has more than one hundred deputies in the Italian Parliament, drawn from all parts of the kingdom. He is the unofficial manager of the country.

POLITICS WERE STORMY.

End of Debate That Followed the Pacific Scandal.

"Like good dogs, we went downstairs instead of waiting to be kicked down," was an expression Sir John Macdonald used to use in an airy defence of his actions in connection with the Pacific Scandal disclosures and his subsequent resignation. They were stormy days in 1873, when the Conservative Government, charged with corruption of a gross sort in connection with the Pacific Railway project, delayed inquiry and abandonment of office. The debate was hot, the condemnation at length administered to the Government by Donald Smith, afterward Lord Strathcona, is thought to have influenced Sir John to give up. Afterward Sir John made scornful and unflattering references to "that man" Smith.

On the final day of the debate in the House when Macdonald announced his resignation, there were stirring and even disorderly scenes. These are recalled vividly by Geo. C. Holland in Maclean's Magazine. Mr. Holland was official reporter in the Senate for nearly half a century, and his reminiscences are sprightly and informing.

"The galleries were thronged to capacity from day to day as the debate proceeded, and great excitement prevailed everywhere," he writes. "It became evident that the Government were weakening, as their supporters, one after another, deserted them. The final blow was the defection of the six Prince Edward Island members, who had been elected as supporters of the Government. When the House met on November 6 excited crowds were pouring into the galleries as Sir John Macdonald rose and announced the resignation of the Government. The announcement was received by the Opposition in silence which lasted for some minutes. Then some feminine whispers broke the spell and there was a storm of cheers from the Opposition, in which the throngs in the galleries joined. The noise and excitement did not abate for hours on the floor of the chamber, where the members were massed. Mingled with them were large numbers of the spectators, who had descended from the galleries. There was no regard for order, all, members and outsiders alike, shouted and gesticulated, and crowds wandered where they pleased, the doorkeepers and messengers being powerless to prevent them. Very many remained in the galleries watching the extraordinary scenes on the floor below them.

"When the noise had subsided somewhat, a voice called, 'Change seats!' Immediately there was a rush for desirable places, Opposition members carrying their stationery and papers in their arms to desks they had selected on the Ministerial side. Before dark the disorders subsided and the crowd dispersed."

Water Hemlock.

The death of seven members of one family at Original from the eating of "wild parsnips" has aroused the greatest interest in the Botany Department of the University of Toronto. Professors R. B. Thomson, F.R.S.C., and H. B. Sifton, M.A., in their text-book, "Guide to the Poisonous Plants and Weed Seeds of Canada and the Northern United States," give a good deal of attention to the "wild parsnip." It was known to the Indians as the "suicide plant." The roots have a sweetish and not unpleasant taste, and a rather parsnip-like odor.

Cases have been reported of horses being killed by eating roots upturned by the plough. Animals have also been reported to have been poisoned, especially in the spring, by drinking water from wet places where the water hemlock existed. The poison was considered to have got into the water from the juices of the roots being crushed by the trampling of the animals.

Some writers state that the plant is not poisonous in winter and spring. Others believe that the effects in autumn are just as deadly. Many claim, however, that during the hot weather a large quantity may be eaten without harmful results. The poison is very rapid in its action, and a very small quantity will produce death. Soon after eating severe abdominal pain manifests itself and death generally follows in a few minutes.

It was pointed out that water hemlock has no relation to the tame parsnip.

How Many Words Do You Use?

Between 1,000 and 2,000, but it is difficult to arrive at an accurate estimate. In country districts only 500 to 700 words are enough for the ordinary needs of conversation, while habitual readers of newspapers and good books collect a vocabulary of from 2,000 to 3,000 words.

Trades and professions may greatly increase the vocabulary of the persons engaged in them. Thus some 4,000 words have been added to the dictionary to describe electricity and its kindred occupations. Artists and doctors use technical and scientific terms that increase the number of the words they use by 500 or 1,000. Authors often use 5,000 words or more.

There are only 6,000 different words in the Old Testament. The poet Milton used only 8,000, and Shakespeare in all his works employs between 15,000 and 16,000 different words.

No English Dogs.

The importation of dogs from Great Britain and Ireland has been prohibited by the Department of Agriculture. This measure has been approved owing to an outbreak of rabies among the animals in the Old Country. Dogs may be imported, however, provided they are accompanied by a certificate, signed by an official of the British Board of Agriculture, that they are from an uninfected area.

The early Greeks used large stones and sacks of sand as anchors.

Salaries of Movie Stars

What is advertised as the "Truth About Hollywood" is the name of a series of articles the New York Herald has been publishing about this noted screen colony, the concluding article being the truth about the salaries paid the actors. The truth seems to be that they are not as large as the press agents say or the performers would like. They are not as deep as a well nor as wide as a church door, but they are probably ample when one considers the work and intelligence which are exchanged for them. If one is to take into account the beauty that is tossed into the scale they may seem meagre, of course. But obviously they are not commensurate with the publicity that the wage earners receive, nor do they correspond to the admiration bestowed upon the favorites. If Russell Sage, who had no admirers, was able to leave an estate of several millions, what ought to be the estate of Douglas Fairbanks? Obviously something like the war debts of the world. If a woman so lacking in feminine charm as Hetty Green piled up $50,000,000, what ought the estate of the sightly Mary Pickford to reveal?

Charlie Chaplin does not receive a million dollars a year, advertisements to the contrary notwithstanding. The film company to which he is under contract agreed to pay him a million dollars for eight pictures, and it has taken him five years to make them. This works out at $200,000 a year. Out of this Charlie has to pay the cost of production, which averages $60,000 a picture. So, making a deduction for the income tax, Charlie is by no means as wealthy as he is supposed to be. It is probable, however, that he has a percentage in the distributor's profit. He could make more money if he were less an artist, for he taxes his time in turning out his comedies. It is reported that he is tired of the slap stick and custard pie method and stays away from the studio as much as possible, although the expense keeps mounting just the same. The Herald investigator says that the dog Chaplin used in making "A Dog's Life" grew from puppyhood to maturity before the picture was done, and that in order to keep the effect of juvenility it was necessary to fake toward the end—to place the camera further away in order that the dog might seem the same size that he was when the film was begun.

Chaplin, Mary Douglas, Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart are all producing on their own account. Bill used to draw down $2,000 a week. At present the highest paid salaried star in Hollywood is Mary Miles Minter. Her contract calls for five pictures at the graded rate of $30,000, $40,000, $50,000, $60,000 and $70,000. She made them all in a year, so that her income was $250,000. Pauline Frederick had a contract for $7,500 a week, but consented to cut to $3,000 when retrenchment was the slogan of the movie world. Betty Compson, on a five-year contract at $2,000 a week, also acquiesced in a reduction, as or that Wallace Reid was reduced from $$1,750 to $1,250 a week is doubted by the Herald investigator, in view of the fact that the greatly admired Wally is one of the chief drawing cards in the movies.

Rudolph Valentino, who is considered one of the finest actors of the day, but who is just recently coming into his own, has signed a contract for $1,000 a week for the first year, $2,000 for the second year and $3,000 for the third year. Harold Lloyd gets a lump sum for each picture and a percentage of the profits when they exceed a certain amount. It is estimated that this favorite has put by $350,000, which ought to keep him in spectacles for the rest of his days, if he does not look through them too hard. Mary Pickford's earnings are a secret, but they do not amount to a million a year. Friends in Hollywood believe that she and Doug. have been netting about $500,000 each. Mary is a wise investor, and is reputed to have a fortune of some $3,000,000. Doug. is not a good saver. He spends great sums on his productions, the "Three Musketeers" having cost him $750,000.

These are the great money-makers, but Hollywood is made up largely of actors and actresses who draw from $2,000 to $75 a week. The lowest would seem a reasonable stipend, but for the fact that these people are paid only when they are working. They may toil for two months on a film, and another film in which they can be used may not turn up for six months. So their earnings for a year may not amount to much more than the earnings of a satisfactory clerk or a trusted stenographer. On the legitimate stage an actor is sure of his salary so long as the play lasts. It is not so in the movies. A moving picture may attract crowds for years and yet take only two months to produce. The performers are paid for the two months. Some of the directors draw from $1,500 to $2,000 a week. The late William Desmond Taylor received $1,250. He was regarded as an uneven producer. Some of his pictures were masterpieces; others mediocre. The best camera men receive $200 a week.

An Odd Cargo.

One of the oddest cargoes on record was probably that carried lately by a British steamer bound for Morocco. It consisted of 2,000,000 gallons of purified drinking water for the use of the Spanish troops fighting the rebels in Morocco.

Tracing Designs on Linen.

It is a simple matter to trace monograms or designs on linen if the part of the linen to be marked is starched and ironed very smoothly.

DAUGHTER HAD TO HELP MOTHER

Now Can Do All Her Housework Alone Because Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Jasper, Minn. — "I saw in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and took it because I was having such pains in my stomach and through my back that I could not do my work. I had tried other medicines, but none did me the good that your Vegetable Compound did. Now I am able to do all my work alone while before I had my daughter staying at home to do it. I have told a number of friends what it has done for me and give you permission to use my letter as a testimonial." — Mrs. JESSE PETERSEN, Route 1, Jasper, Minn.

There is no better reason for your trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound than this—it has helped other women. So if you suffer from displacements, irregularities, backache, nervousness or are passing through the Change of Life remember this splendid medicine. What it did for Mrs. Petersen it may do for you.

The Vegetable Compound stands upon a foundation of nearly fifty years of service.

Old Shoes at Weddings.

The practice of throwing an old shoe after a bride is, it seems, quite misapplied when it is done by some of her companions for luck. According to the spirit of the ceremony, which is of very ancient lineage, it should be done by the parent or guardian of the bride, as indicating a renouncing of all authority over her. Chieftains in feudal times took off their shoes and handed them to their conquerors in token of accepted defeat, from which practice this slipper-throwing custom is said to have descended.

Chautauqua.
Chautauqua has come and gone and once more the citizens of Napanee and surrounding country enjoyed a week of splendid entertainment. The financial returns this year are not sufficient to cover the outlay and the surplus of previous years will be drawn upon to cover the deficit. A contract has been entered into to bring Chautauqua here again next year and it is to be hoped that this year's deficit will be more than recovered. The beautiful piano used during the Chautauqua was from the warerooms of Mr. R. B. Allen.

Last Sunday at Trinity Church.
Those who attended Trinity church on Sunday last enjoyed a rich treat at both services. In the morning Rev. Dr. Kirby, Principal of Albert College, Calgary, occupied the pulpit, and his discourse on Service was listened to with rapt attention, and the large congregation were given a message to carry away with them which should inspire them to a larger measure of service to their community. The California Male Quartette composed of Messrs. Lynch, basso; McKenzie, baritone; Rand, first tenor; and Emerson, second tenor, rendered several sacred selections at the morning service, and delighted the large congregation, and they were requested to again sing at the evening service, which they kindly consented to do. Prof. Baird gave an organ recital from 6.30 to 7.00 which was keenly enjoyed by a large number. Rev. A. J. Wilson had charge of the evening song service when a number of sacred selections were given by the quartette which were appreciated to the full. Messrs. Emerson and McKenzie also sang sacred solos very acceptably. Rev. Wilson gave an interesting talk on church music. Miss Ramsay also assisted with a solo. Dr. Kirby and the quartette made up the Chautauqua programme for Saturday last, and our people feel under a deep obligation to them for their courtesy in remaining over for the Sunday services at Trinity.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 10.—Angora despatches to local newspapers report that the Persian bandit Simko has proclaimed a Kurdish republic, assuming the presidency himself after defeating the Shah's army. It is said that Simko commanded 35,000 men and was assisted by Mustapha Kemal Pasha, former Turkish War Minister, with the fighting lasting for several days. Simko's cavalry is reported to be marching on Tabriz.
The new republic embraces the regions of Kermanshah, Selmas, Urumiah and Erdilak, according to the despatches, which report also an insurrection in Luristan, Western Persia.

Wood That Will Not Burn.
Wood that will not burn is, of course, a much-to-be-desired thing. It is reported that not long ago there was tested on a considerable scale in England an American invention for making wood noninflammable. It appears that the sap is first withdrawn from the wood by evaporation in heated vacuum chambers. Then a fireproofing solution is forced into the pores of the timber under hydraulic pressure. It is said that wood thus treated resists decay as well as fire.

FRENCH HEALER FAILS

AUTO-SUGGESTION DIDN'T HELP SHELL-SHOCKED SOLDIERS.

M. Emile Coue Tried the Effect of His Powers on Men Who Lost Their Reason In the War, But He Found That He Did More Harm Than Good—Patients Must Have Their Faculties.

M. Emile Coue, of Nancy, France, may be the remarkable man his friends believe, but it is plain that he made a grave mistake when, at the solicitation of Lady Beatty, he visited an English hospital for shell-shocked soldiers and sought to cure some of them. He was passing his hands over the body of one victim of the war who was suffering from bodily tremors, when the soldier began to shriek. The effect upon the rest of the soldiers was "indescribably hellish," in the words of one witness, some such effect, one might imagine, as though a bomb had been dropped among them. Lady Beatty and Coue had to depart hurriedly and the demonstration, which was intended to be the crowning triumph of his English visit, was a lamentable fiasco. Hospital attendants say that the ill effects of M. Coue's visit will not be obliterated for a year. The incident, however painful to the unfortunate soldiers, is not likely to injuriously affect M. Coue's reputation. He is as famous in France and England to-day as Einstein.

He will have a reasonable excuse, too, for his failure to do anything but harm to the mentally unbalanced soldiers. Hitherto his experiments and his successes have been confined to those in possession of their mental faculties, but suffering from physical disabilities, and since M. Coue does not profess to be a neurologist, he could not have been expected to know the probable effect of his efforts upon the mentally afflicted. Moreover, he accepts no pay for his work. He lays claim to no supernatural powers, to no powers at all out of the ordinary. He cures by auto-suggestion, or, rather, he is able to make the patient put forth a strong effort of the will to cure himself. There are witnesses to prove that in thousands of cases he has succeeded and that the cures have been permanent. In any event, he is no faker making a profit out of the sufferings of the unfortunate and instilling them with hopes impossible to realize. There is, however, a suspicion that M. Coue has been exploited by well-meaning neurotic women.

Two years ago M. Coue was engaged in a small business in Nancy and found his hobby in the cultivation of flowers. His health was generally good, but he was troubled with rheumatism. Then he came across the advertisement of some American publisher recommending a pamphlet by an American medical man on the subject of auto-suggestion. M. Coue forwarded the francs and received the book. It made a profound impression upon him. The American, who seems to have been a disciple of Mary Baker Eddy, said that there was no disease. When one thought he was ill he suffered merely from a belief in illness. If he could rid himself of the belief he would discover that just as beauty lies in the eye of the observer, so pain lies in the imagination of the sufferer.

M. Coue began to experiment upon himself. In vigorous French idiom he assured himself that he was not ill, that he was suffering because of a hallucination of illness. "Dispossess yourself of the idea," said Coue to himself. "Get up and walk without pain—go about your business as you should." Thus admonished, M. Coue dispossessed himself of the idea and got up and walked without pain. He discovered that if each morning before rising, or each night before falling asleep, he dogmatically assured himself that he had no rheumatism or no pain, he was able to rise and move about more freely than formerly. In a short time he was cured completely. It occurred to him that others might be cured, and one morning when he met a groaning and rheumatic neighbor he asked him with astonishment what was the trouble. The neighbor at first thought he was joking, but M. Coue assured him that there was nothing whatever wrong with him but his imagination. Acting on Coue's instructions, the friend cured himself, and news of the miracle spread abroad. Acquaintances and strangers began calling on M. Coue and told them just what he had done for himself and what he had done for the neighbor. He was able to do the same thing for them. On one occasion it is related, he restored a paralytic. He professed no knowledge of medicine, not even an acquaintance with anatomy, but cure after cure was affected and witnessed to in front of his little house in Nancy. Patients began to come from far away, and the spell was cast upon them. Most distinguished of them was Lady Beatty, whom he cured of an affliction of long standing. Another was "Rita," the novelist. They both bore willing witness to the profound truths they had learned from this unassuming little Frenchman. In a recent demonstration in London it is said that a paralytic was cured before hundreds of witnesses. It seems likely that the personality of this quaint, honest little Frenchman has had some remarkable stimulating effect upon patients. History is full of the miracles wrought by the Messieurs Coue.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

is greatly relieved by constitutional treatment. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be reduced, your hearing may be destroyed forever. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system, thus reducing the inflammation and assisting Nature in restoring normal conditions.

DEATH MADE SUDDEN CALL.

General Counsel of Grand Trunk Had Passed Away.

MONTREAL, July 10.—One of the best-known railwaymen in Canada, W. H. Biggar, K.C., vice-president and general counsel of the Grand Trunk Railway system, died here suddenly Friday night in his sixty-ninth year.

Mr. Biggar was apparently in the best of health, and was on his way to the office when he was stricken with cerebral hemorrhage, and died within an hour in a hospital.

Mr. Biggar was the son of J. L. Biggar, formerly M.P. for East Northumberland. He won first honors in scholastic and athletic fields at Upper Canada College. Called to the Bar in 1890, he entered into partnership with John Bell, K.C., of Belleville, general solicitor for the Grand Trunk Railway system, under the firm name of Bell & Biggar.

Mr. Biggar was elected Mayor of Belleville in 1888-89 and was elected to the Ontario Legislature in 1890 in the Liberal interest as M. P. P. for West Hastings. Although offered the Speakership of the Ontario Legislature, he refused further active political life after two terms, to attend to his railway and legal duties. He was made a Q. C. in 1899. In 1903 the late Charles Rivers, then president of the Grand Trunk Railway, brought Mr. Biggar to Montreal as assistant general solicitor to the system on the transfer of the Grand Trunk Pacific plan. He was made general counsel of the system in 1910.

Mr. Biggar was regarded as having the most accurate knowledge of the whole proceedings connected with the building up of the Grand Trunk Railway system and of the Grand Trunk Pacific. He appeared before the Privy Council in 1911 in the important implementary case of the Grand Trunk Pacific versus the Dominion Government, arising out of the guarantees in connection with Grand Trunk Pacific bonds, and won a victory that aroused widespread interest. He was chief counsel for the Grand Trunk in connection with the arbitration proceedings held here last year into the affairs of the Grand Trunk stock, a case that will be decided by the Privy Council in London, England.

TO MAKE TEST CASE.

Can Liquor for Exportation Be Carried on Streets.

LONDON, Ont., July 10.—Deputy Police Magistrate P. S. Bartlett devoted a long session of the police court Saturday to consideration of the case in which License Inspector J. E. Keenleyside prosecuted the Labatt Brewing Co., in a test case, for transporting liquor on the public streets, in contravention of a recent amendment of the Ontario Temperance Act. The company, to secure the test, notified Inspector Keenleyside of its intention to make the shipment of nine per cent. liquor at a certain hour. A small quantity of liquor was placed on one of the company's own trucks, and a similar quantity on another owned by the Dominion Transport Co., which operates as a common carrier in connection with the Dominion Express Co. and the C.P.R. The inspector made the seizure near the police station, and the case was adjourned until Saturday. Adjournment was made until Monday before the argument was completed. J. M. McEvoy, K.C., for the Labatt Company, admitted the fact that the bottles contained liquor, and that Talbot street, where the seizure occurred, is a public street. He secured from Inspector Keenleyside the admission that the law specifically admits the transportation of wine of intoxicating strength on the highways, and claimed that it is not the intention of the law to prevent direct shipments for export. Liquor, he said, is a substance of trade and commerce, and he argued that Provincial Legislature has no jurisdiction to prohibit foreign commerce in liquor. He said that the Labatt Company's Dominion charter permitted it to operate in Canada and elsewhere, and, under Dominion laws, he claimed the right to export.

Strike In the Vatican.

LONDON, July 10.—The Pope has ordered an inquiry into the strike of gendarmes in the Vatican, being extremely annoyed that affairs have been permitted to come to such a point, according to the Rome correspondent of the Weekly Dispatch. Count Cecconi, who dismissed two of the ringleaders, is said to have retired to his private apartments, saying he is ill. The gendarmes demand a higher pension, but it is conceded it may result in the Swiss guards striking for similar rights.

MONARCHISTS IN PLOT

They Want to Overthrow the German Republic.

Authorities Suspect Royal Exiles of Activities—Ludendorff Is Accused of Conspiring With the Soviet Government at Moscow to Make Trouble for the Men at Berlin.

BERLIN, July 10.—The monarchist plot was of greater proportions and is coming nearer to the persons of the ex-kaiser and the crown prince than was previously suspected.

Deutsche Volkische Gruppe, of the Deutsche Nathnale Volkspartei, which has constantly advocated the kaiser's restoration and is known to be in continuous touch with Doorn and Wieringen, was caught red-handed preparing arms and ammunition caches in the region about Magdeburg and about Hamburg, with a murder band, which was responsible for Rathenau's death, is also involved.

That all the Deutsche Volkische group knew or approved of the assassination plans is extremely unlikely, but that all were prepared for a counter-revolutionary move to restore the Hohenzollerns is borne out by the large quantities of arms found, which evidently comprise but a small portion of those hidden.

Most Magdeburg were found 600 rifles, 16 machine guns and several large cases of automatics and grenades. There was a number of Republicans in districts like East Prussia, Bavaria and Silesia.

It is impossible at this time to ascertain all the ramifications of the plot because state officials themselves protect the conspirators.

There are not enough contraband arms, it is believed, to cope with the Reichswehr, if the Reichswehr remained faithful to the republic, but the simultaneous arming of monarchists in various sections it was hoped that local garrisons could be won over.

The purpose, it is said, was not to attempt another Kapp putsch, but to surround Berlin and central industrial Germany with a ring of monarchistic reserves.

In Magdeburg there has been arrested as one of the chief conspirators. Major Schefer, chairman of the Magdeburg branch of the Deutsche Nationale Volkspartei. At the same time a cache of arms was found in a stable at his home. They had been stowed behind the hay and covered with straw. Another cache was found in a shed at the home of Herr Dreckmann, of the Deutsche Nationale, and a member of the Magdeburg City Council.

Besides these two, several other citizens of Magdeburg were arrested, all members of the Deutsche Nationale, and some belonging to the Deutsche Volkische group.

The Volkische Gruppe itself, which has 71 members in the Reichstag, though faced with the fact that many of its members are implicated in the present plot, and the whole of the Deutsche Volkische group, which is involved, have formally announced that they will expel the minority of their party.

"Uncle Ludwig" (Erich von Ludendorff, former quartermaster-general of the German army) and "Uncle Emil" (Emil Kemnitz) and Major Escherich, under Luderdorff, and now active in the Bavarian Government) are shown by secret Moscow correspondence to have plotted with Bolsheviks in Moscow for the overthrow of the German republic.

The police have discovered that Ludendorff hoped to destroy the democracy by a union of German Monarchists and the Soviet autocrats, but documentary proof of it was only forthcoming through papers found on the courier Guenther, who was arrested, following the assassination of Foreign Minister Rathenau.

Search of addresses revealed in the letters, in Berlin, Fiberfeld and Munich, supplied the republican authorities with the inner details of the Monarchist plot.

The first big arrest was that of Count Gebhard Zu Rentelow, Germany's leading nationalistic publicist and noted for his Monarchist sympathies and open support of the former Kaiser. Confidential papers were seized at Munich which the police say will furnish evidence linking the conspiracy to the Hohenzollerns themselves.

Ludendorff and Escherich are revealed as the chief movers behind the plot scenes. They were known in the correspondence only as "Uncle Ludwig" and "Uncle Emil."

In one of the letters to the monarchist doctor, Pittinger, in Munich, who took over the armed monarchist organization, headed by Escherich, when Escherich was forced to flee to Austria, Leventlow wrote a warning for Ludendorff not to put faith in the Moscow promises. Leventlow, less gullible than Ludendorff, suspected that Moscow was merely drawing Ludendorff out.

Big Fire In Kingston.

KINGSTON, Ont., July 10.—Fire at four o'clock Sunday morning caused $20,000 damage in a brick building next to the Grand Opera here, and occupied by five industrial firms. The damage is: Monarch Batteries Co., $7,000; Kingston Art Co., $5,000; Kingston Brush Co., $8,000; Fisher Box Co., $1,000, and Kingston Factories, Ltd., $600.

Considerable loss is borne by the street car company, through damage to the building.

The fire started in the top storey, occupied by the Monarch Batteries Co., but no definite cause is assigned by the chief. A request has been forwarded to E. P. Heaton, fire marshal, for an investigation, as this is the second big blaze within a week.

During the conflagration Fireman Thomas Lawlor suffered a severe cut in the wrist from falling glass. This is his second injury within a week, as he hurt his eyes during the Finkle fire on Wednesday last.

Donald, son of Brig.-Gen. Gunn, of Toronto, received a bullet wound in his left side while shooting frogs at Kawartha Park.

READY FOR ELECTION

Poll Will be Taken in Manitoba on July 18th

There Have Been No Acclamations In the Western Province and Struggle for Control of Legislature Has Caused Numerous Breaks In the Old Party Lines—Labor Has Twenty In Field.

WINNIPEG, July 10. — Returning officers in 53 Manitoba constituencies collected $200 deposits from each of 151 citizens and declared 146 men and five women officially nominated as candidates for the Legislature in the elections of July 18. Polling in The Pas and Rupert's Land is deferred. There were no acclamations, candidates having announced themselves at the last minute in Ethelbert and Carillon, where it was thought the United Farmer nominees might be unopposed. Forty members of the old Legislature are seeking reelection.

The United Farmers of Manitoba have 49 candidates and are contesting every rural constituency. They are not represented in Brandon, Portage la Prairie and St. Boniface. The Winnipeg Progressives, allies of the Farmers, have eight candidates for the ten seats given the capital city. The Government party has 37 candidates, with a full slate of 10 in Winnipeg, and, in addition, there are "fusion" candidates representing the Conservatives and Progressives in Brandon and in Kildonan and St. Andrews. There are 14 rural constituencies where the Liberals are not contesting. These include being Assiniboia, Carillon, Cypress, Dufferin, Iberville, Lakeside, Morden-Rhineland, Norfolk, Roblin, Rockwood, St. Clements, Souris, Swan River and Turtle Mountain. There are 26 Conservatives in the field, including seven in Winnipeg.

Labor has 20 candidates, 13 running in Winnipeg and the balance in Assiniboia, Brandon, Dauphin, Kildonan, St. Boniface, St. Andrews and St. Clements. The 13 Winnipeg Labor candidates represent varied interests. Six speak for the Independent-Labor party—F. J. Dixon, W. Ivens, S. J. Farmer, Mrs. M. McCarthy, J. Simpkin and S. Cartwright. Union Labor candidates are W. Simpson and F. W. McGill. John Queen and Geo. Armstrong are Socialist candidates, and W. Hammond, M. Popovich and A. Henderson represent the Workers' party.

Eighteen independents of various degree — five in Winnipeg and the remainder scattered — complete the line-up. Forty-three candidates in all are competing in Winnipeg for 10 places; five women are in the field, all in Winnipeg. They are Mrs. McCarthy, Arthur Rogers (Liberal), who sat in the last House.

There are four-cornered contests in the four constituencies of Assiniboia, Emerson, Manitou and St. Clements. In fourteen constituencies there are three candidates, and in 25 there are two candidates.

Three Cabinet Ministers who sat in the last Legislature have quit public life after long service. The Conservative leader, Major F. G. Taylor, is a candidate in Portage, his home town, against the Minister of Public Works.

FIGHTING HIGH TARIFF.

U. S. May Not Make Threatened Blow at Canada.

WASHINGTON, July 10. — Chairman Adams of the Republican National Committee came out with a statement that sounds like the first notice that there will be no tariff bill this season. Instead of a tariff bill the country will be presented with a campaign issue, to wit: The obstructive tactics of the wicked Democrats, whose dark plots prove even to the Republican statesmen from giving the people the customs bill for which they are pining.

"The country's assumption of prosperity," announced Chairman Adams, "is halted while a tariff measure fulfilling Republican pledges is delayed by Democratic filibustering in the Senate—which violates the principle of majority rule in this government of public opinion."

Actually there has been no filibuster. Lenroot, Borah and other Republicans have talked almost as much, and quite as strongly, against the high tariff as have the Democrats. Every speech has been directed against one or another of the indefensible schedules.

The increase in the cost of living has been tabulated and presented as, for example, when Walsh (Democrat, Massachusetts), showed by the Department of Agriculture figures that the boosts made to satisfy the farm bloc would add to the food bills, an annual sum equivalent to $13 for every man, woman and child in the United States.

RAINS PROMISE RELIEF.

Forest Fires In British Columbia May Be Quenched.

VICTORIA, B. C., July 10. — On Vancouver Island and the lower mainland of British Columbia the forest fire situation is still critical, but a strong wind, which has died down to a gentle zephyr, and indications of rain within the next 24 hours brought new hope to those living on the Fraser, which have destroyed approximately $1,500,000 worth of valuable timber.

Many settlers from the fire-swept Merville district are now in Courtenay, where tents have been erected and a relief station established, and others are on their way to the place. More than 100 fugitives are now quartered in Courtenay and tents and military supplies are being rushed from Victoria.

Premier John Oliver, on his return from the fire area, declared there is need for public aid for the sufferers and appealed to the people to supplement the aid which the Government will co-operate in the restoration of the soldiers' settlement of Merville.

The situation in the Nanaimo district was better to-day, all fires being under control. Fires which have been raging at Cowichan Lake and threatening lumber camps are also checked.

LONDON, July. 10. — Rev. Conrad Noel, vicar of the little village of Thaxted, Essex, will be requested to remove Sinn Fein and Bolshevik flags which have been long displayed inside his church, consequent upon the granting of an application by a number of his parishioners by the Chancellor of the Consistory Court of Chelmsford, for a faculty directing the removal of the emblems.

The vicar, Rev. Conrad Noel, professed extreme Socialistic sympathies, and became the protagonist of a large number of parishioners, he persisted in displaying the flags near the chancel. The parishioners, who felt themselves aggrieved, had, indeed, at different times, taken severe measures for the removal of the flags, raids having been made upon the church for the purpose. The vicar, however, was by no means without supporters, and while the anti-Socialist element had once or twice succeeded in removing the flags, the success had only been temporary, for the revolutionary emblems had been restored very quickly in their old places.

WEBSTER —MAN'S MAN

by Peter B. Kyne

"I'll just fool you two hombres a whole lot," he thought, and stooping, picked up a small stone. On the instant the two men, having approached within thirty feet of their quarry, made a rush for him.

Their charge was swift, but though it was, the little stone which John Stuart Webster hurled was swifter. It struck the young man fairly between the shoulderblades with a force sufficient to bring him out of his sentimental reverie with a jerk, as it were. He whirled, saw the danger that threatened him, and—sprang to meet it.

"Bravo!" yelled Webster, and ran to his aid, for he had seen now that it was to be knife work. Tragedy instead of melodrama.

The man with the puckered eye closed in with such eagerness it was apparent to Webster that here was work to his liking. The young man raised his light cane, but Pucker-eye did not hesitate. He merely threw up his left forearm to meet the expected blow aimed at his head, lunged for ward and slashed viciously at the young man's abdomen. The latter drew back a step, doubled like a jack knife, and brought his cane down viciously across the knuckles of his assailant's right hand.

"So it is thou, son of a pig," he called pleasantly in Spanish. "I fooled you that time, didn't I?" he added in English. "Thought I would aim for your head, didn't you?"

The blow temporarily paralyzed the assassin's hand; he dropped the knife, and as he stooped to recover it with his left hand, the young man, before retreating from Pop-eye, kicked Pucker-eye in the face and quite upset him.

"Stop it!" shouted Webster.

Pop-eye turned his head at the outcry. The man he was attacking fell into the position of a swordsman en garde, and thrust viciously with the ferrule at the face of the pop-eyed man, who, disregarding Webster's approach, seized the cane in his left hand and with a quick, powerful tug actually drew his victim toward him a foot before the latter let go the stick.

Before he could give ground again Pop-eye was upon him. He grasped the young man by the latter's left arm and held him, while he drew back for the awful disembowelling stroke. As his long arm sped forward the head of John Stuart Webster's heavy cane descended upon that flexed arm in the crook of the elbow, snagging it cleverly.

The knife never reached its destination!

"You would, would you?" said Webster reproachfully, and jerked the fellow violently around. The man he had rescued promptly struck Pop-eye a terrible blow in the face with his left hand and broke loose from the grip that had so nearly been his undoing; then Webster tapped the assassin a meditative tap or two on the top of his sinful head for good measure and to awaken in him some sense of the impropriety and futility of resistance, after which Webster turned to discuss a similar question of ethics with Pucker-eye.

The scar-cheeked man was on his knees, groping groggily for his knife, for he had received a severe kick under the chin, and for the nonce was far from dangerous. Stooping, Webster picked up the knife, closed the knife and cane grasped in his left hand he seized Pucker-eye by the nape with his right and jerked him to his feet. The assassin stood glowering at him in a perfect frenzy of brutish, inarticulate fury.

"Take the knife away from the other fellow before he gets active again," Webster called over his shoulder. "I'll manage this rascal. We'll march them over to the market and turn them over to the police." He spoke in Spanish.

"Thanks, ever so much, for my life," the young man answered lightly, and in English. "But where I come from it is not the fashion to settle three arguments in a court of law. To call an officer is considered unclubbike; to shoot a prisoner in this country is considered murder, and consequently I have but one alternative and I advise you, my good friend, to have a little of the same. I'm going to run like the devil."

And he did. He was in full flight before Webster could glance around, and in an instant he was lost to sight among the trees.

"That advice sounds eminently fair and reasonable," Webster yelled after him, and was about to follow when he observed that the young man had abandoned his pretty little silver-chased walking stick.

"That's too nice a little stick to leave to these brigands," he thought, and forthwith perused himself of it and the pop-eyed man's knife, after which he turned not upon the order of his going but went, departing at top speed.

The young man he had saved from being butchered was right. An entangling alliance with the police was, decidedly, not to John Stuart Webster's liking, for should he unfortunately, form such an alliance, he would be haled into court as a witness and perhaps miss the steamer to San Buenaventura.

He had planned to spend an hour in the market, drink a cup of cafe noir, smoke a cigarette, and return to his hotel in time for a leisurely breakfast, but his recent bout with grim reality had blunted the edge of romance. He ordered his driver to take him back to the hotel, sprang inside and congratulated himself on his lucky escape.

CHAPTER VIII.

Webster's trunk went aboard the steamer early the following morning, and at noon he entered a taxi with his hand baggage and was driven to the levee where La Estrellita lay tugging gently at her mooring lines. Owing to the congestion of freight and traffic the chauffeur stopped his cab a little distance from the gangplank, where Webster discharged him with a liberal tip.

The latter, however, swung his passenger's bag and suitcase to the ground, picked them up and started for the gangplank.

"Never mind my baggage, lad," Webster called after him. "One of the deck boys will care for it."

The chauffeur turned. "You've been generous with me, sir," he answered, "so I think I had better carry your baggage aboard. If you permit a deck boy to handle it, you merely have to give another tip, and that would be sheer wanton waste. Why shouldn't I earn the one you gave me?"

"I hadn't figured it out that way, son, so here's another half dollar for being the only existing specimen of your species in captivity. My stateroom is No. 34, upper deck, port side," Webster answered, smiling. The man took the tip eagerly and hurried toward the gangplank; the quartermaster on duty shouldered a way for him and he darted aboard.

Webster followed leisurely. At the gangplank the purser's clerk halted him, examined his tickets and punched them.

"Where is the other man?" he asked.

"You have two tickets here."

"Oh, that blamed valet of mine," Webster answered, and glanced around as if in search of that mythical functionary. "It would be like the stupid fellow to miss the boat," he added. "When he comes—"

Webster ceased speaking abruptly. He was looking straight into the malevolent orbs of Pucker-eye, who was standing just behind the clerk at the foot of the gangplank.

"I wonder if Pop-eye's around, also," Webster thought, and he faced about. Pop-eye was standing in back of him, leaning over the railing of the gangway.

"Which is the valet?" the purser's clerk asked, scanning the names on the tickets.

"Andrew Bowers."

"All right, Mr. Webster," the other answered, with that genial camaraderie that seems inseparable from all of his calling. "When Andrew comes I'll send him aboard."

He started to pass the tickets back to Webster, but a detaining hand rested on his arm, while a dark thumb and forefinger lifted the trailing strips of tickets. Pucker-eye was examining them also.

The purser's clerk drove his elbow backward violently into Pucker-eye's midriff and shook him off roughly.

"What do you mean, you black-and-tan hound?" he demanded. "Since when did you begin to O. K. my work?"

Pucker-eye made no reply to this stern reproof. He accepted the elbow with equanimity and faced Webster with an evil smile that indicated mutual recognition.

"Senor," he said. "The senor he ees sail on La Estrellita for San Buenaventura, no?"

"So you came nosing around to see about it, eh? Doing a little plain gumshoe work, I see."

Pucker-eye bowed. By the simple exercise of courage and bad manners he had looked at John Stuart Webster's ticket and was now familiar with his name and destination.

Webster glowered darkly at Pucker-eye and said:

"Well, you scoundrelly cuthroat, what are you going to do about it? Try a little of your knife work on me, I suppose?"

The fellow grinned—the kind of grin that is composed of equal parts of ferocity and knowledge of superior strength. That grin did more to disconcert Webster than the knowledge that he had earned for himself two bloodthirsty and implacable enemies, for Pucker-eye was the first of his breed that Webster had ever seen smile under insult. That cool smile infuriated him.

Pucker-eye took out a cigarette case, selected a cigarette and presented the case to Webster. His bad manners in selecting his own cigarette first was deliberate, as Webster knew. It was the Latin-American's method of showing his contempt.

"We shall meet again, Meester Webstaire," he said. "May I offer a cigarette for the—what you Americans call—the keeck-back? No?" He smiled brightly and closed his puckered eye in a knowing wink.

Webster took his tickets from the purser, folded them, placed them in his pocket and for a few seconds regarded Pucker-eye contemptuously.

"When we meet again, you scum," he retorted quietly, "you shall have no difficulty in remembering me. You may keep your cigarette."

His long, powerful right arm shot out; like a forceps his thumb and forefinger closed over Pucker-eye's rather flat nose; he squeezed, and with a shrill scream of agony Pucker-eye went to his knees.

Still holding the wretch by his proboscis, Webster turned quickly in order that his face might be toward Pop-eye.

"Pop-eye," he said, "if you take a hand in this, I'll twist your nose, too, and afterward I'll throw you in the river."

He turned to Pucker-eye.

"Up, thou curious little one," he said in Spanish, and jerked the unhappy

"Up, Thou Curious Little One."

rascal to his feet. The latter clawed ineffectually at the terrible arm which held him, until, presently discovering that the harder he struggled the harder Webster pinched his nose, he ceased his struggles and hung limply, moaning with pain and rage in the grip of John American.

"Good!" Webster announced, slacking his grip a little. With his left hand he deftly extracted a hair from each flank of the screaming little scoundrel's scant mustache and held them before the latter's tear-filled eyes.

"My friend," he said gently, "mark how the gringo gives his little dark brother a lesson in deportment. Behold, if I have given thee a souvenir of our meeting, I also have taken one. By this pinched and throbbing nose shall I be remembered when I am gone; by these dark hairs from thy rat's mustache shall I remember thee. Go, and thrust not that nose into a gringo's business again. It is unsafe."

He released Pucker-eye, made his way through the crowd to his room, looked in, saw that his baggage was there, and walked around on the starboard side to join in the general farewell of all on board to the crowd on the levee.

At the shore end of the gangplank Pucker-eye and Pop-eye still waited. The unfortunate Pucker-eye was weeping with pain and futile rage and humiliation, but Webster noticed that Pop-eye's attention was not on his friend but upon each passenger that boarded the ship, of which there were the usual number of late arrivals. As each passenger approached, Pop-eye scanned him with more than casual interest.

Webster smiled. "Looking for that valet they heard me talking about," he reflected. "Pop-eye, you're a fine, capable lad. I thought you had the brains of the two. You're not going away until you've had a chance to size up the re-enforcements at my command, are you?"

He lighted a cigar and leaned over the rail as the steamer, gathering speed, swept down river.

"Good-by, you golden fizz and chicken gumbo," he called, as the city receded and the low, wooded shores below the city came into view.

When he had finished his cigar he cast the stub overboard, watched it until it disappeared astern, and then went around to stateroom No. 34. As he stepped in and closed the door a masculine voice said very pleasantly:

"How do you do?"

Mr. Webster looked up and beheld a young man, arrayed in a very fancy pair of light blue silk pajamas, stretched at his ease in the upper berth.

John Stuart Webster stared at the stranger for several seconds and concluded he was invading the sanctity of another's stateroom. "Excuse me," he said, "I guess I'm in the right church but the wrong pew," and he stepped out and looked for the number on the stateroom. To his surprise it was No. 34 after all, so he stepped back into the stateroom and favored the stranger with another scrutiny.

"It does appear to me, my friend," he said presently, "that I detect something strangely familiar about your pajamas."

"I wouldn't be the least bit surprised Mr. Webster. I found them in your suitcase."

Fell a silence of perhaps half a minute. Then:

"I dislike to appear inquisitive," Webster began, "but the fact is, neighbor, I'm curious to know where you got that book. I observe you are reading Samuel Butler's 'Way of All Flesh,' and that the book is slightly damaged. Recently I purchased such a book in—"

"Pray do not take the trouble to explain," the other answered airily. "I discovered this excellent book in your suitcase also. In fact, for me, that suitcase has proved to be a repository of treasures."

John Stuart Webster's neck came out of his collar with the suddenness of a turtle snapping at a fly; he drew himself up beside the top berth until his face was on a level with his unbidden guest's, upon whom he bent a look of mingled emotions.

"Who the devil are you?" he demanded.

"I regret I have no card, but even if I had it would be no kindness to inflict upon an American gentleman the cognomen my parents honored me with, for it is long and many-jointed, like a peanut, and embodies the names of all the saints in the calendar. Moreover, just at present I am traveling under an alias. I am known as Mr. Andrew Bowers."

STOMACH ULCER AND GALL STONES

After Suffering 25 Years, Completely Relieved by "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

MR. EDWARDS

MAPLEHURST FARM, HILLSBURG, P.Q.

"I am in my 78th year. About 25 years ago, I began to have trouble with my Stomach. One doctor said I had Cancer; another said, Ulcer of the Stomach; another, Gall Stones; others, Ulcers of the Liver and Inflammation of the Gall Bladder.

Three years ago, I consulted one of the best specialists in Montreal. He said I must go to the hospital, have an Ulcer cut out of my stomach and gall stones removed. I was then 74 years old. I said "NO."

Then, I began to take "Fruit-a-tives". I found they helped me a lot, and I still take them occasionally, and I am so much better that my old friends often ask me what I have done to myself to look so well. I am gaining in weight and enjoying life very much."

"And your occupation?" Webster managed to articulate.

"Valet de chambre to that prince of gentlemen, Mr. John S. Webster," the other replied with a mischievous gleam in his dark eyes.

Mr. Webster sat down limply on the settee. He was undecided whether to roar with laughter or shriek with rage; while he struggled for a decision Andrew Bowers blew smoke rings at the ceiling.

"Haven't I seen you before?" Webster queried presently.

"I wouldn't be surprised. I drove you down to the steamer in a taxi half an hour ago. You will recall that the taxi driver carried your luggage aboard."

Webster gazed around the stateroom. "Where have you hidden your livery?" he demanded.

"I wrapped it in a newspaper; then, seeking a moment when the deck outside was deserted, I stepped forth in my—I beg your pardon, your—pajamas and tossed it overboard."

"But apparently you did not bring aboard with you a suit of clothes to take the place of your livery?"

"Quite true—lamentably so, Mr. Webster. Perhaps you will accept my desperate need as an excuse for borrowing your pajamas. I notice you have another suit of them. Fortunate man!"

Andrew Bowers was a man of perhaps thirty years, five feet ten inches tall, and apparently in excellent health. He might have weighed a hundred and seventy pounds and he was undeniably handsome.

While Webster was wondering whether his companion was merely a pie-face tramp or an absconding bank cashier, a knock sounded on the stateroom door. He opened it and the purser stood in the entrance.

"Ticket, please?" he announced.

Webster surrendered both tickets, receiving in turn two seat checks for the dining saloon, and the purser passed on to the next cabin.

Andrew Bowers smiled a small, pre-sient smile, but said nothing, and presently John Stuart Webster broke the silence. "Well," he ordered, "sing the song or tell the story."

"I noticed you surrendered my ticket to the purser," the young man answered irrelevantly, "and I am glad of that. I take it as prima facie evidence that you have made up your mind to accept my company."

"You're too infernally cool and cocksure, my friend," Webster warned him testily. "I pride myself on a sense of humor and I dearly love a joke until it's carried too far, but be advised in time, young man, and don't try to play horse with me. My acceptance or non-acceptance of you is a subject for future discussion, since at present we have some fiduciary matters before us. You owe me fifty dollars for your ticket, Andrew Bowers, and in view of the fact that I never saw you before today, suppose we start the voyage by squaring the account."

Andrew Bowers sat up in the berth and let his legs drape over the side. "Mr. Webster," he began seriously, "I prior to the arrival of the purser to collect the tickets, you had handed my ticket to me, saying: 'Here is your ticket, Mr. Bowers. Be kind enough to reimburse me to the extent of fifty dollars,' I should have been compelled to admit then, as I do now, that I haven't fifty dollars. Fortunately for me, however, you surrendered the ticket to the purser before acquainting yourself with the state of my fortunes; the voyage has commenced and whether you like it or not, my dear sir, I am your guest from now until we reach San Buenaventura. Rather an interesting situation, don't you think?"

John Stuart Webster was of Scotch ancestry. He had a hereditary regard for baubees. He was a business man. Prodigal spender though he was and generous to a fault, the fact remained that he always made it a point to get value received, and he was prodigal with his own money; he preferred that the privilege of prodigality with the Websterian funds should remain an inalienable prerogative of the sole surviving member of the Webster family.

"I think you're too cool, young man," Webster retorted. "Just a trifle too cocksure. Up to the present moment you have proffered no evidence why you should not be adjudged a cad, and I do not like cads and must decline to permit one to occupy the same stateroom at my expense. You are clever and amusing and I laughed at you, but at the same time my sense of humor is not so great as to cause me to overlook your impudence and laugh with you. Now, if you have anything to say, say it quickly, because you're going to go away from here—in a hurry."

"I plead guilty to the indictment, Mr. Webster, and submit as an excuse the fact that desperate circumstances require desperate measures. I am not begging my way, neither am I beating it, for the reason that both forms of travel are repugnant to me. I am merely taking advantage of certain fortuitous circumstances to force you, an entire stranger, to extend to me a credit of fifty dollars until we reach San Buenaventura, when you will be promptly reimbursed."

"It is not my habit," Webster retorted stiffly, "to extend credit to strangers who demand it."

"I do not demand it, sir. I beg it of you, and because I cannot afford to be refused I took care to arrange matters so that you would not be likely to refuse my request. Really, I do not mean to be cocksure and impudent, but before you throw me out I'd like to let you in on a secret about yourself."

"Well?"

"You're not going to throw me out."

"Why not?"

"Because you can't."

"That's fighting talk. Now, just to prove to you the depth of error in which you flounder, young man, I am about to throw you out." And he grasped Andrew Bowers in the grip of a grizzly bear and whisked him out of the top berth.

"Wait one second," his helpless victim cried. "I have something to say before you go any further."

"Say it," Webster ordered. "Your tongue is the only part of you that I cannot control."

"When you throw me out on deck," Andrew Bowers queried, "do your pajamas go with me? Does the hair go with the hide?"

"They cost me sixteen dollars in Salt Lake City, but—good lord, yes. I can't throw you out another suit; d—n it, I can't throw you out at all."

"Didn't I tell you so? Be a good fellow and turn me loose."

"Certainly—for the time being. You'll stay locked in this stateroom while I have a talk with the captain. He'll probably dig up a shirt, a pair of dungarees and some old shoes for you and set you ashore before we get out of the river. If he doesn't do that he'll keep you aboard and you'll shovel coal for your passage."

"But I'm Andrew Bowers and the purser has collected my first-class ticket!"

"What of it? I shall declare—and with truth—that you are not Andrew Bowers, that you are not my valet, and that I did not buy the ticket for you. I dare you to face the captain in my pajamas and prove you aren't a stowaway."

"You would win on that point," the baffling guest admitted, "but it is a point you will not raise. Why? Because I have another trump up my kimono." He climbed back into the upper berth and from that vantage point gazed down benevolently upon John Stuart Webster. "I'm disappointed in you," he continued sadly. "I thought you'd show a little normal human curiosity about me—and you haven't. You do not ask questions or I could explain, while I cannot volunteer information without appearing to air my impudence, and that of course would be repugnant to me. I am hoping you will accept, my word of honor that you shall be reimbursed two hours after you land in San Buenaventura."

"New music to your song, my friend, but the same old words," Webster retorted, and stepped to the stateroom door. "You're doomed to shovel coal or go ashore."

"Liars!" If I go ashore, your responsibility for my life ceases, Mr. Webster, but if the chief engineer happens to be short one coal-passer and the captain sends me down to the stoke hole, your responsibility for my death begins, for I'll be put ashore publicly at San Buenaventura and two hours later I'll be facing a firing squad in the cemetery at the Catedral de la Vera Cruz."

"Gosh," John Stuart Webster murmured dazedly. "I'm afraid I can't take a chance like that for fifty dollars. I'm whipped to a frazzle. Any time I'm sitting in back of a royal flush and the other fellow bets every chip in the pot, I always buy the wine. When it arrives we shall drink to our better acquaintance. Pending its arrival, please be advised that you are welcome to my pajamas, my stateroom, my book and my stateroom. You are my guest and you owe me nothing, except, perhaps, your confidence, although I do not insist upon that point. Where I come from every man kills his own snakes."

And he held up his hand for Andrew Bowers to shake.

"Mr. Webster," the latter declared feelingly, "I am not a lord of language, so I cannot find words to thank you. I agree with you that you are entitled to my confidence. My name is—"

"Tut, tut, my boy. Your name is Andrew Bowers, and that identifies you sufficiently for the time being. When I suggested that I was entitled to a measure of your confidence I meant on a few minor points only—points on which my curiosity has been abnormally aroused

"Very well, my friend. Fire away."

"Are you an American citizen?"

"No, I am a citizen of Sobrante."

"You had no money to pay for your passage to San Buenaventura so you schemed to make me pay your way. Hence I take it that your presence in the capital of your native country is a matter of extreme importance and that the clerk in the ticket office of the Caribbean Mail line is a friend of yours."

"Quite true. He knew my need."

"You were under surveillance and could not leave New Orleans for San Buenaventura unless you left secretly. When I purchased both berths in this stateroom and the ticket clerk knew I held a first-class ticket for a valet that was not, he decided to saw off on me a valet that was. Disguised in the livery of a chauffeur and carrying hand baggage you hoped to get aboard without being detected by your enemies who watched the gangplank."

Andrew Bowers nodded.

"Do you think you succeeded?" Webster continued.

"I do not know, Mr. Webster. I hope so. If I did not—well, the instant this steamer drops anchor in the roadstead at San Buenaventura, she will be boarded and searched by the military police, I will be discovered and—" He shrugged.

"Lawn party in the cemetery, eh?" Webster suggested.

Andrew Bowers reached under his pillow and produced two heavy automatic pistols and a leathern box containing five clips of cartridges. These he exhibited in silence and then thrust them back under the pillow.

"I see, Andrew. In case you're cornered, eh? Well, I think I would prefer to die fighting myself."

"I'm not worried, Mr. Webster. Somehow, I think I ran the gantlet safely."

"But why did you throw your livery overboard?"

"It was of no further use to me."

"But you'll have to have some clothes in which to go ashore, you amazing man."

"Not at all. The steamer will arrive in the harbor of San Buenaventura late in the afternoon—too late to be given pratique that day. After dark I shall drop overboard and endeavor to swim ashore, and in view of that plain fact clothes would only prove an embarrassment. I shall bind my own clothes dry naked and penniless, but once ashore I shall quickly find shelter. I'll have to risk the sharks, of course."

"Man-eaters?"

"The bay is swarming with them."

"You're breaking my heart," Webster declared sympathetically. "I suppose you're going to feign illness throughout the voyage."

"Not the least bit necessary. I'll merely refuse with my appetite. I have prescribed for myself a mild attack of inflammatory rheumatism, as an excuse for remaining in bed and having my meals brought to me. This service, of course, will necessitate some slight expense in the way of tips, but I am hoping you will see your way clear to taking care of that for your guest."

Silently Webster handed Andrew Bowers ten dollars in silver. "That ought to hold you," he declared. "For the rest, you're up to some political skullduggery in Sobrante, and what it is and what's your real name are two subjects in which I am not interested. Let it be understood that you are my valet, Andrew Bowers. That's all I know about you and that's all I care to know about you. In fact, the less I know about you the less will I have to explain in the event of your sudden demise."

"Fair enough," quoth Andrew Bowers. "You're a man after my own heart. I thank you."

CHAPTER IX.

Prior to leaving New Orleans, Webster had cabled Billy Geary that he was taking passage on La Estrellita and stating the approximate date of his arrival at San Buenaventura—which information descended upon that young man with something of the effect of a gentle rainfall over a hitherto arid district. He had been seeing Dolores Ruey at least once a day ever since her return to Sobrante. He was quick, therefore, to seize upon Webster's cablegram as an excuse to call upon Dolores and explain the mystery surrounding his friend's nonappearance.

"Well, Dolores," he began, in his extreme ease of manner, "I've heard from Jack Webster."

"What's the news, Bill?" Dolores inquired. From the first day of their acquaintance she had been growing increasingly fond of Geary; for many a week she had been desirous of calling him Bill, which is a comfortable name and so Dolores' way of thinking, a peculiarly appropriate cognomen for such a distinctly American young man. At mention of the beloved word he glanced down at her pleasurably.

"Thank you," he said. "I'm glad you got around to it finally. Those that love me always call me Bill."

"You called me Dolores."

"I move we make it unanimous. I'm a foe to formality."

"Second the motion, Bill. So am I—when I care to be—and in our case your formality is spelling our courtship. And now, with reference to the extraordinary Senor Webster—"

"Why, the poor old horse has been down with pneumaine poisoning. They carried him off the train at St. Louis and threw him on his head and pumped him out, and just did manage to cancel his order for a new tombstone. He says he's feeling regularly again and has booked passage on La Estrellita, so we can look for him on the next steamer arriving."

"Oh, the poor fellow!" Dolores murmured—so fervently that Billy was on the point of hurling his heart at her feet on the instant.

Jobs Depend on the Safety of the Forests

DON'T

DON'T take any chances with fire in Ontario's forests.

DON'T throw away cigarette or cigar butts, pipe "heels" or burnt matches until you are dead sure they are out.

DON'T neglect to drown out your fire with lots of water.

DON'T build your camp fire against a rotten log or stump; nor on windy points; nor near moss patches nor at the base of a tree.

Build it in a former fireplace, or on a flat rock, or on a spot cleared down to the true soil below, or by the edge of the water.

DON'T forget that the upper layer of ground in the forest consists of partially rotted wood which will burn.

RIVER DRIVERS, shanty men, pulp loggers, and all men who work in the lumber woods, on the river or at the mill—get this: Your job depends on keeping forest fires from burning up the bush.

Every time you leave a camp fire or a smudge burning you are taking chances on a forest fire that will do you out of a job. Every time you throw away a burning match or a cigarette, or drop the "heel" of your pipe on the ground, you are taking a chance. In summer time, moss, dead wood, dry leaves or the regular wood-fibre soil of the forest are all ready to burn. Millions of feet of timber and pulp are being burnt up that way every year.

Ontario's forests are not growing fast enough to keep up. Forest fires will do you out of a job if they keep on a few years more. Watch yourself.

MOULDY SWEET CLOVER

Is a Dangerous Feed, Especially to Young Cattle.

Investigational Work by Provincial Veterinarians — It Makes Castration and Dehorning Risky—More Research and Experimenting Necessary.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Recently considerable sickness and losses have been reported among cattle being fed on ensilage. In some instances only a few animals have been affected on a particular farm, but in a few cases the losses have been serious, as one farmer is known to have lost 17 animals out of a herd of 50 cattle. The frequency and peculiarity of these losses has led the Department to have investigations and experiments made to determine the cause.

Investigational Work by Ontario Veterinarians.

The staff of the Ontario Veterinary College have been in close touch with the veterinary surgeons throughout the province, and reliable information obtained as to the prevailing circumstances where cattle have died. In all cases investigation has revealed the fact that the losses have occurred among cattle fed extensively on sweet clover ensilage which had become mouldy. Samples of the ensilage were shipped to the Veterinary College, and experiments conducted clearly indicated that mouldy sweet clover ensilage was harmful to cattle. From observations and information available at the present time, it would appear that the harm is confined to sweet clover ensilage which has become mouldy, and that the continued feeding of it is liable to cause death.

Young Cattle the First to Succumb.

It is an interesting fact that young cattle under three years of age are the ones which suffer most severely and succumb the quickest. In illustration of this the case mentioned where in a herd of 50 cattle the 17 which died were all young cattle under two years of age and in good condition. No sickness had been present in the herd until after the feeding of the ensilage commenced, and the losses occurred within a few weeks. Apparently mature cattle over four years of age are able to withstand the ill effects better than young cattle. However, continued feeding of damaged sweet clover ensilage may be harmful to cattle of all ages.

It Makes Castration and Dehorning Dangerous.

It is also interesting to note that operations such as dehorning and castration performed on cattle that have been kept largely on mouldy sweet clover ensilage caused sudden death in many cases, while the same operations similarly performed on cattle fed differently have not been followed by ill effects. The exact nature of the poisonous factor associated with the ensilage, and the manner in which it produces harmful effects in cattle and to cause their death has not yet been definitely determined, and any opinions expressed at the present time are based on practical observations.

More Research and Experimenting Required.

In fact a large amount of intense study, investigation and research will be necessary to obtain reliable conclusions regarding the possible dangers incidental to the feeding of mouldy sweet clover ensilage, or as to whether sweet clover cut at certain stages and under certain conditions develops harmful properties as silage. In the meantime sufficient evidence is at hand to justify warning farmers against the feeding of mouldy ensilage to live stock in order to avoid losses, and under no circumstances should operations including dehorning and castration be performed on cattle which are being fed on sweet clover ensilage if it appears mouldy. Such animals seem to develop marked vascular changes which produce a tendency to internal hemorrhage resulting in death.—Dr. C. D. Mcililvray, President, Ontario Veterinary College, Toronto.

GARDEN SEED PLENTIFUL.

Certain Varieties of Peas Are Possible Exception.

Indication that there is a plentiful supply of garden seeds this spring with the possible exception of certain varieties of peas, is contained in reports received by the bureau of markets from representative seed dealers engaged in wholesale, retail, and mail-order business. Study of several mail-order catalogues indicates that in the majority of cases the prices of seeds are less than for the past two years, the greatest reduction being indicated for cabbage seed. Marked reductions are also shown in the prices for garden beet, carrot, onion, spinach and English and Swedish turnip seed. An increase of about 18 per cent. is noted in the prices for garden peas, while similar increases are shown for musk-melon summer and winter squash, and tomato seed. This condition should prove favorable to extensive garden planting.

Replies to inquiries addressed to representative seed dealers showed that a few in industrial centers, particularly in the east, were selling from 10 to 30 per cent. less seed than last year. The cause, apparently, was the shortage of labor on truck farms. Compared with normal conditions before the war, the reduction in these eastern centers ranges from 10 to 45 per cent.

On the whole the sales to home gardeners seem to be larger than those of last year, ranging from a 5 per cent. increase in some sections to 50 per cent. in others. Dealers in the most northerly cities were unable to report adequately because the season had not advanced sufficiently at the time replies were sent in.

WATER IN FARM HOMES

Compression System Will Give General Satisfaction.

Water Pumped Into a Metal Tank Against Compressed Air—Various Methods of Working the Pump—Air Valves a Necessity — Seven Steps to Success In Poultry Culture.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

In my last article I described briefly the attic tank system of water supply for the rural home. This system has given very good satisfaction in the past, but I doubt if it will be installed in many homes in the future, as there is now on the market something very much superior in many respects. I refer to the compression water system, which I will try to describe in a few words.

How the System Operates.

The chief feature of this system is that water is pumped into a strong air-tight cylindrical metal tank against the entrapped air which is compressed in the upper portion of the tank, and the compressed air constitutes the power to drive the water out of the tank when a faucet is opened on the discharge line. This is very simple. The metal tank will vary in size according to the amount of water used, but a common size is 6 feet by 2½ or 3 feet. It should be kept about full of water and at a pressure varying from 40 to 45 lbs. Greater pressure, if required, may be secured by pumping the water to a higher level than named in the tank, or by pumping some air into the tank before any water is pumped in. A water gauge is attached to one side of the tank to indicate the height of the water in the tank, and on the discharge pipe close to the tank is a pressure gauge. The tank must be kept in a frost-proof place—say the cellar, or an underground pit. The water keeps cool, clean and fresh in this tight tank.

Methods of Working the Pump.

There are many different ways of operating the pump in order to fill the tank: By hand, by windmill, by gasoline engine, or by electric motor. A few minutes of pumping each day by hand will keep the ordinary-sized house supplied with plenty of water. When the pump can be operated by windmill or electric motor, there is the great advantage of automatic starting and stopping of the pump. The automatic electric water systems of the present day are very convenient and also very efficient. In case of shallow wells and cisterns the pump and motor can be located inside the house or barns. As farmers get electric current these automatic systems will become very common both for shallow and deep wells. The automatic systems require very little attention and are very noiseless. There are several styles or designs, but any of them of reputable firms will give good satisfaction if the installation has been done properly and if the outfit be given good care.

If soft water as well as hard water is required under pressure, two tanks are necessary, one for soft and one for hard. Only one pump is required in this double tank outfit.

Air Valves a Necessity.

Pumps used in connection with compression systems must be provided with an air valve for renewing the air in the tank because the air dissolves in the water and escapes with it. If means for pumping in air were not provided for, the tank would eventually become waterlogged and the system would be rendered absolutely useless.

The compression water system is described and illustrated in Bulletin 267, entitled "Farm Water Supply and Sewage Disposal." A copy may be secured without cost by dropping a line to the Department of Physics, O. A. ., Guelph, Ont. Give us a chance to help you to solve your water supply problem.—R. R. Graham, O. A. Seven Steps to Success In Poultry Culture.

1. Keep accurate records. Little progress can be made without this first step.

2. Feed a properly balanced ration. Such a ration furnishes nutrients for growth, maintenance, fattening and eggs. The production of eggs must be a constant aim.

3. Give proper care and comfort by good housing and management. Discomforts are: Extremes of heat and cold, hunger and thirst, four air and dampness, and diseases and parasites.

4. Keep standard-bred, utility stock. There are five good breeds for the farm: Plymouth Rock, Rhode Island Red, Leghorn, Wyandotte and Orpington. Varieties of these have been bred for heavy egg-production.

5. Breed from the best, both male and female.

6. Sell unprofitable stock

7. Market graded products. Maximum prices are secured from graded products. Markets demand a constant supply, and this calls for community co-operation.

There Is Urgent Need for Garden Like This This Year—The Prospect of a Shortage of Trench Garden Vegetables Makes Home Food Production Particularly Important.

Home-made Spray Keeps Flies Away.

By preventing flies from tormenting the cows a much greater flow of milk is obtained during the summer months and the remainder of the lactation period. The following home-made mixture has given good results. It is better than several other mixtures tried and quite as efficient as the prepared sprays costing a dollar per gallon. It is made as follows:

1½ quarts of any standard coal tar oil,

1½ quarts fish oil,

1 pint oil of tar,

1 quart coal oil,

½ pint oil of eucalyptus.

Mix in ten gallons of lukewarm soft water in which a bar of laundry soap has been dissolved.

Spray twice a week, in the morning after milking and in the afternoon when cows are brought in for silage or green feed. When a half-barrel cart with spray nozzle attachment is used, two men can spray a herd of forty-cows in ten minutes. This mixture is not perfect and does not keep all the flies away and, furthermore, it leaves the coat rather harsh and causes dust to adhere; however, it is very beneficial and practical.

Shelter from the hot sun of summer must be provided if efficient and economical production is to be expected.

THE TUNIC BLOUSE

Garment in "Casaquin" Style Beautiful and Useful.

Gives Long Waist Line and Corsage Can Be Made Gorgeous or Simple.

One of the most important novelties of the present season is the lightly decorative tunic blouse which is fashioned in "casaquin" style but which forms in itself a very beautiful and useful garment. The casaquin outline, according to a Paris fashion writer, has become an established favorite.

This is easy to understand. A well cut casaquin blouse makes the figure look slender and eminently graceful; it gives the long waist line now so fashionable and corsages of this order can be made as gorgeous, or as simple, as individual taste suggests.

Now that it is again the fashion to have the skirt of one color—and material—and the corsage of quite another, an opportunity is given for picturesque combinations of all kinds, and the Parisiennes have not been slow to make the most of an agreeable situation.

Individual women have done this, but far more important is the example set by some of our leading dress designers. One of the latest models had a draped skirt made of a new black crepe which has a slightly rough surface and a casaquin corsage in dull rose mousseline de soie embroidered in soft shades of rose, copper and dark gray.

The corsage, which was severely plain save for the embroideries, came down a few inches below the normal waist, and at the hem it was slightly draped. The sleeves were quite short, the neck was cut round, and at the left side, just over the hip, there was a waterfall of black ribbons.

Another Doeuillet model of similar design had a draped skirt in black lace mounted over silver tulle and a casaquin corsage of jade-green taffetas, the latter curiously embroidered here and there—in silver thread, with tiny cut jet beads in the interstices.

This gown had a wonderful girdle—which fell over the hips—of cut jet and silver. Just at the waist there was an obviously unreal camellia made of pure colored organdie muslin.

Here and there sensational models are exhibited to catch the attention of those foreign buyers who insistently demand "something different," but the fact remains, that all the best dressed women—Parisiennes and Americans alike—are wearing dainty frocks which still display a straight outline even though a good deal of supple material may be crushed into the composition of a robe.

KIDDIE FROCK, LIKE MOTHER'S

Linen, in French blue and white, is combined into a charming frock for a kiddie. It is almost like mother's and yet adorably youthful.

Flannels Are Favored.

Beautiful plain color, striped and checked flannels are very much used for all manner of spring and summer sports apparel. The materials that are recommended are guaranteed not to shrink or fade if carefully washed, and there is certainly a freshness about these flannels that is very pleasing. Many sport skirts are developed from the striped fabrics, and a popular finish for the bottom of the skirt is self-fringe—that is, the material is simply raveled to form a fringe and the edge overstitched or whipped with a fine thread so that it will not continue to fray and ravel. Sometimes a slip-over smock or a little coat matching the stripe will accompany the skirt, the two making up a clever little sport suit.

STREET GOWN OF BLUE CREPE

This extremely modest street gown was developed by a Parisian designer. The fabric is moroccan crepe and of blue crepe, soutached with gold braid. A belt buckle of cloth, cut in an antique design, completes the ensemble.

EVER POPULAR TUB DRESS

Fabrics of Washable Variety Are No Longer in Class With High-Priced Luxuries.

There seems to be no reason whatever why every woman should not be daintily gowned at comparatively small cost this summer. Fabrics of the washable variety, whether cotton or linen, are no longer in the luxury class, and certainly style designers have offered a splendid range of attractive styles.

A frock of two materials is one of the excellent examples of smart simplicity offered this season. It may be white or plain color linen with cretonne. This type of dress is cut on the simplest of lines, buttons sensible and comfortably in the center back, and is of the one-piece variety. The cretonne is used for collar and cuffs and to form a girdle effect at either side.

White organdie and gingham in a half-inch check in blue and white, red and white or yellow and white, are frequently combined in dainty summer frocks. This combination is also worked out in some very pleasing blouses for wear with white tub skirts. The major portion of the blouse is usually of the organdie with pipings, belt or girdle and collar, of gingham, instead of using the sheer material as trimming for the heavier fabric.

CORRECT FOR THE LUNCHEON

Bisques and Bouillons Should Be Served in Two-Handled Cups—the Latest.

Bisques and bouillons are the correct soups for luncheons and should be served in two-handled cups (the newest form is the two-handled cup which is very shallow and broad—known as a "cream soup cup"). The use of bouillon cups at dinner or of soup plates at luncheon stamps the hostess as ill-informed. Roast beef or mutton may not be offered as the hearty course at luncheon; chops, croquettes, patties, birds or broiled chicken are correct. A formal luncheon may be started with a fruit course of berries, grapefruit or melon; or with a cocktail of mixed fruits; or with clams, crab meat or oysters.

BRIEF FASHION NOTES

Drawnwork on light frocks is a very popular form of decoration.

Double stitching is used as trimming on tailored serge suits.

Plaited flounces are used on sleeves as side panels and as tunics.

An effective mode is the hanging of loose panels from a low waist line.

Swagger coats have high-buttoned necks and narrow fitted shoulders.

Among new fabrics for evening are self-tone brocades and beaded nets.

Tailettes in square and oblong shapes are in much demand for evening gowns.

Taffeta for hats is used in a combination both of the taffeta and a crown of leghorn.

Plaid and striped ginghams are being used for warm weather separate skirts for both children and grownups.

The "handkerchief" drapery is one of the new ideas evolved to bring about the uneven line at the skirt edge so much favored this season.

To terminate with ostrich tips the long ribbon streamers which fall below the skirt of the dancing frock is a very latest. These tips may match in color with the dress or may be in vivid contrast.

Many lace dresses have skirts in deep, overlapping flounces; other models show lace draperies and almost invariably the lace falls here and there below the edge of the underskirt, making a soft, shadowy effect above the ankles.

Age of Cows.

It is more difficult to determine the age of a cow than of a horse, say the live stock men at the State College at Ithaca, New York. They agree that some estimate of a cow's age may be made from her teeth and horns. The number of "annual rings" on the horns, plus two, for example, usually gives the animal's age, but remembering that the pairs of permanent teeth come nine months apart and the first pair comes at about 19 to 24 months of age, will help to verify it.

SHOW ONE EVEN HEM

Vandyke Mode Featured in Gowns for Afternoon Wear.

French Designers Are Showing Dresses Short in Front and Very Long at Back.

Some of the new French models for afternoon wear show the popular uneven hem; the favorite idea seems to be the uneven, vandyke points at either side, sometimes as many as three. When the skirt is longer back and front than at the sides it looks rather untidy, but the longer sides give a quaint and not unbecoming outline.

Curiously enough, writes a Paris fashion correspondent, Redfern and Doucet are both showing dinner gowns which are notably short in front and very long at the back. When I say short in front I mean something remarkably short—cut up in fact to show the lower limbs half way up to the knees. In some cases a semi-transparent plaited petticoat is introduced and this is often made of silver or gold lace. The cut-up front is distinctly becoming.

Black gowns for afternoon and evening wear are becoming ubiquitous. Every possible material is called into use, but the two popular stuffs are panne and charmeuse—especially panne.

I recently saw an exquisite dinner gown made of black panne, which had irregular embroideries worked in pale gold threads strewn over the tunic over-dress. There was a heavy, irregular fringe of gold and jet beads and the upper part of the corsage was made up entirely of fine gold lace. At the waist there was a cluster of purple grapes and a few bright red roses.

Hardly any of the new evening dresses have sleeves of any kind. The arms are bare right up to the shoulder; very often the back is equally bare, but this fashion is not meeting with the approval of the best Parisiennes. Some of the Rue de la Paix dressmakers are showing such grossly exaggerated evening models that women of fine taste have revolted.

LONG SLEEVE, BELL-SHAPED

Arm Coverings for Morning and Afternoon Frocks Are Nearly All Full Length.

Marked features at the Paris openings show the straight silhouette of former seasons, the low waistline, and a new note sounded in the entrance of full circular skirts with decidedly flat backs. Sleeves for morning and afternoon frocks are nearly all full length and are set in at deep arm holes. They are quite slim and widen at the wrists to form something like the old-fashioned bell shape. Neck lines are square or rounded and the new tailored dresses show many high collars. Tailored dresses are made of all kinds of crepe materials, printed chiffons, and waxed taffetas are extensively used. Narrow valenciennes lace is featured as trimming on serge and crepe frocks.

CHAPEAU HINTS FOR SPRING

Fruits and Flowers in Abundance Are Predicted for Use on Variety of Headgear.

The wizards of millinery art are busy planning the creations that will adorn milady's proud head this spring.

Some of the advance models are already on display and if there is anything in signs, the spring is due for a rainbow of color in contrast to the sombre of winter.

There is a new shade of violet bound to be becoming to the fair skinned and blond or brunette type equally well. It is a sort of blue when first displayed, but one could safely call it blue without fear of having one's neighbor call it violet. So subtle is the color note, that it is truly charming. Rose, too, has a strange new blend. It mixes with orchid to form a decidedly new shade for spring millinery.

Fruit and flowers in abundance are predicted. According to present signs, the hats will be small, but brimmed. At front, just above the short brim, a multitude of colorful fruits and flowers nestle together. Novelty fruit, such as pink grapes on a violet hat is shown. Silver grapes on gold are new and fascinating. So also are the green and yellow and blue fruits that nestle together to form a bizarre effect at the front of a tangerine hat in chiffon taffeta.
